Just a THOUGHT

RELATIONSHIPS

We as humans possess unique personal talents and desires that direct our lives and help us to reach the goals we have set to achieve success and happiness. One of the most important needs in our life besides food and shelter is the need to be in relationship with others. By opening myself to the life of another, I begin to see and value my own worth.

No matter what sort of relationship this may be, I begin to see who I am by thinking of another. The unique choices we make regarding who we allow into our lives helps us to develop trust. No matter what type of relationship this may be: marriage, friendship, career choices, we begin to see our own worth, value, and the worth and value of another or others when I open my heart and trust. But sometimes in these relationships my trust in another may become a disappointment if another breaks that trust. When this happens, the loss will cause us to raise an emotional wall to keep another away from us so that we will not get hurt again. The New Testament message, not only during our present Easter Season, but year round is to trust God. Since Easter, our readings have shown the Apostles changing their own personal relationship goals with Jesus Christ. They no longer argue about who is the greatest or what their role will be in an earthly kingdom but, what God desires them to do and to be for the Kingdom of Heaven. This is our challenge today as Christians. To lose what we know keeps us from being fulfilled as a Child of God by thinking not what is good or best for ME but what is good our best for God in me. Let the "Holy Spirit" help you to develop a new sense of trust by praying and asking God what you need to remove from your life, any selfish goals or desires and ask God to lower any and all defensive walls of mistrust that you have and accept the Will of God the Father. Open your heart to be in a relationship with God as your Spouse, Companion, Friend.
